Transfield Services enters tertiary education market – awarded $145 million in new work

Transfield Services has signed a five year $88 million integrated facilities management and property services contract with the University of Newcastle, delivering on its strategy to enter new growth markets.

The scope of work with the University of Newcastle will initially focus on providing integrated facilities management and property services across its metropolitan and regional campuses in New South Wales and will commence in July 2015. There is a provision to extend this scope of work to provide capital and upgrade works.

Transfield Services' Managing Director and CEO, Graeme Hunt, said: "The tertiary education sector, along with the defence, social and property sectors, represent exciting growth markets for Transfield Services. The engagement with the University of Newcastle supports Transfield Services' successful expansion into the tertiary education sector with a key customer."

"We appreciate the importance of a quality education delivered in quality facilities and we look forward to supporting both students and staff at the University of Newcastle," added Graeme Hunt.

This agreement follows recent contract extensions in the housing and health sectors including those with the NSW Land and Housing Corporation worth $45 million over the next five months and the Gold Coast University Hospital worth $12 million over nine months.
